Saving-time aided schoolgirl attack

Sue Harshbarger (Letters, Oct. 31) got it right – that was my first thought when I read about the little girl who got attacked on her way to school. Why are we sending our kids to school in the dark?

Yeah, yeah, I know the rhetoric: go in groups, safety in numbers. Ideally, that's the way to go. But sometimes reality gets in the way and the ideal course of action is just not available to us.

We in the heartland are nothing if not realists. Let's take care of our kids. Get rid of daylight-saving time. Or keep it, and put Indiana in the Central Time Zone.
